'INTELLIGENT' EV MAKER AGREES TO BUY AM GENERAL PLANT

A Chinese-owned, Silicon Valley-headquartered company has announced an agreement to acquire the Mishawaka commercial assembly plant of South Bend-based AM General LLC. SF Motors says it plans to produce "environmentally-friendly, intelligent" electronic vehicles in St. Joseph County. The company is a subsidiary of Chongqing Sokon Industry Group and says it intends to retain the facility's full current work force and invest $30 million into upgrades.

The plant, which employs around 430 in Mishawaka, is operated independently of AM General's military assembly plant in the area. MAP operations will not be affected. SF Motors says it is not releasing financial details of the acquisition, but says the only current customer contract at the CAP is slated to expire at year's end, which would result in the shutdown of a production line. AM General's website says its commercial operations have assembled more than 1.5 million vehicles in more than 50 years, including the Hummer H1 and H2, Ford Transit Connect Electric, MV-1 paratransit vehicles and Mercedes-Benz R-Class.

SF Motors Chief Executive Officer John Zhang "this transaction represents a unique opportunity to grow our intelligent electric vehicle business through the addition of an existing production facility and a skilled work force. We are excited to work closely with our new Indiana-based team to produce SF Motors' next-generation electric vehicle in South Bend, Indiana, and we look forward to becoming a part of the local community and a strong contributor to Indiana's economic growth."

SF Motors recently set up its North American headquarters in the Silicon Valley and a research and development operation in Ann Arbor, Michigan. The company has ambitious plans in the U.S., which include establishing an EV clean mobility brand based on the West Coast that will source its parts primarily in the U.S. and create a supply chain in the country.

The acquisition is expected to close in the fourth quarter. It is awaiting industry approvals, as well as clearance from regulators in the United States and China.

FINANCIALLY SPEAKING

"Fiduciary Rule" or no, all financial advice is conflicted

Mr. Kim is the Chief Operation Officer and Chief Compliance Officer for Kirtz Marbach & Co. LLC, an investment adviser based in Columbus IN. Please visit www.kirmar.com.

According to The Wall Street Journal, "a fiduciary—rooted in the Latin words 'fides' (faith) and 'fiducia' (trust)—is someone who must put your interests ahead of his or her own. That means acting prudently, revealing all relevant information, eliminating as many conflicts as possible and disclosing any conflicts that remain."

The Department of Labor's ("DOL") fiduciary rule ("Rule") was years in the making and holds financial professionals providing investment advice on retirement savings to a fiduciary standard (i.e. requiring them to act in customers' best interests, charge no more than reasonable fees and avoid misleading statements). The Obama administration had said conflicted advice costs U.S. families $17 billion a year and reduces annual returns on retirement savings by a full percent. Opponents asserted the Rule would limit investment options and cause advisors to abandon smaller accounts.

The Rule was to be effective April 10, 2017, but on February 3rd President Trump ordered the DOL to further examine the Rule. The DOL subsequently postponed implementation of the Rule to June 9, 2017. Labor Secretary Alexander Acosta subsequently determined there was no legal basis for further delay.

Though effective now, the Rule may eventually be changed or even scrapped. In addition, new SEC Chair Jay Clayton has indicated the SEC intends to take a leading role in the discussion of a fiduciary standard covering all investors.

It will be housed at Zucrow Laboratories on Purdue's campus, which is one of the largest propulsion labs of its kind at a university in the U.S.

Terminology is confusing. Registered investment advisers (RIAs) are registered with the SEC or state securities regulators and governed by the Investment Advisers Act of 1940, which already holds investment advisers to a fiduciary standard. RIAs typically charge fees based on a percentage of assets under management.

Stockbrokers who work as "registered representatives" of broker-dealers can earn commissions, other fees, and bonuses on stocks, bonds, mutual funds and other financial products they buy and sell for customers. Brokers are held to a lower suitability standard, which means the broker can recommend a security that is "suitable"—though not necessarily the best option for their customer.

Now that the Rule is effective, does that mean you can relax your vetting process? Absolutely not, as it's been proven time and again it's impossible to legislate ethical behavior. Regarding financial products, it will always be Caveat Emptor (let the buyer beware).

The three most important words in financial products are: Follow the Money. Ask your prospective advisor how much money she will make from the recommendation, the different ways she will receive it, both upfront and ongoing, and from whom. Is your firm or the company providing the product running a sales contest that could lead to additional benefits to you (like a trip)? Similarly, do any of the companies your firm works with offer "educational" trips? Finally, will your firm collect any "revenue sharing" fees because they have limited their platform to certain favored products and locked out others?

We are big believers in "eating our own cooking," so my favorite is, "how much of your own wealth do you have invested in the product you are recommending to me?"

There is no such thing as conflict-free advice, including mine. At the end of the day, it's all about trust. Remember, this isn't "Miracle on 34th Street" and the Macy's Santa isn't going to send you to Gimbel's.
